“Miserden was so still, so enclosed in its own bubble of tranquillity, I thought I might have tripped into a golden afternoon of the Edwardian era. Generous herbaceous borders run down either side of a central lawn: echinops, plume poppy, inula, stately spires of delphinium. A pergola of roses and a wide yew hedge shield a kitchen garden. Timeless. Gorgeous.”

- Anna Pavord, Gardens Illustrated

With terraces overlooking the Golden Valley, The Garden at Miserden dates back to the 17th Century when the Manor House was built.

From early spring, visitors to this Cotswold country garden can enjoy beautiful flowering beds, shrubs and fine topiary, some of which were designed by Edwin Lutyens.

Within the Walled Garden, herbaceous borders, with roses and fine specimen trees, nestle together with hydrangea villosa climbing the wall.

Beyond this, the Parterre, with a sundial at its centre, contains hebe, lavender and apricot potentilla. Tulip and allium give a striking mix of colour in early summer.

The octagonal Summerhouse, built in 1999 of reclaimed stone to mark the Millennium, sits before an ornate fountain and variegated fuchsias and berberis.

Topiary hedges planted in the 1920s and the Scented Garden add further character to the unique landscape of Miserden.

Adjoining The Garden is The Nursery with a wide range of bedding plants, roses, shrubs and specialising in hardy perennial plants.

Enjoy a visit to the new Café, opened in 2017, serving a range of hot and cold beverages and snacks between 10am and 5pm Tuesday - Sunday and on bank holidays.
